MNUCHIN WARNS OF TAX REFORM DELAY

1 U.S. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said the Trump administration's timetable for tax reform is set to falter following setbacks in negotiations with Congress over health care, the Financial Times reported. Mnuchin told the Financial Times in an interview that the target to get tax reforms through Congress and on President Donald Trump's desk before August was "highly aggressive to not realistic at this point." "It is fair to say it is probably delayed a bit because of the healthcare," Mnuchin told the newspaper. Mnuchin also told the Financial Times he agreed with Trump's view that the dollar's strength in the short term was hurting exports, but said he saw the currency's strength over the long term as a positive. MANHUNT FOR FACEBOOK MURDER SUSPECT

2 The manhunt for a murder suspect who police said posted a video of himself on Facebook shooting an elderly man in Cleveland widened on Monday as authorities asked the public for help and pleaded with the suspect to turn himself in. Police said they have received "dozens and dozens" of tips about the possible location of the suspect, Steve Stephens, and tried to convince him to turn himself in when they spoke with him on his cellphone on Sunday after the shooting. But Stephens remains at large as the hunt for him expanded nationwide, police said. The shooting is the latest violent incident shown on Facebook, raising questions about how the world's biggest social media network moderates content. REUTERS

PENCE WARNS NORTH KOREA OF US RESOLVE

3 Vice President Mike Pence put North Korea on notice on Monday, warning that recent U.S. military strikes in Syria and Afghanistan showed the resolve of President Donald Trump should not be tested. Pence and South Korean acting president Hwang Kyo-ahn, speaking after a failed missile test by North Korea and a huge display of missiles in Pyongyang, said they would move ahead with the early deployment to South Korea of the U.S. THAAD missile-defense system. Pence was on the first stop of a four-nation Asia tour intended to show that the Trump administration is not turning its back on the increasingly volatile region. REUTERS

IRAQI VP: ISIS SEEKING ALLIANCE WITH AL QAEDA

5 Islamic State is talking to al Qaeda about a possible alliance as Iraqi troops close in on ISIS fighters in Mosul, Iraqi Vice President Ayad Allawi said in an interview. Allawi said he got the information on Monday from Iraqi and regional contacts knowledgeable about Iraq. "The discussion has started now," Allawi said. "There are discussions and dialogue between messengers representing Baghdadi and representing Zawahiri," referring to Islamic State leader Abu Bakr al Baghdadi and Ayman al Zawahiri, the head of al Qaeda. Islamic State split from al Qaeda in 2014 and the two groups have since waged an acrimonious battle for recruits, funding and the mantle of global jihad. Zawahiri has publicly criticized Islamic State for its brutal methods, which have included beheadings, drownings and immolation. REUTERS

Kenyans sweep marathon, but Americans shine

Female first-time marathon runner captures third place.

ERIN TIERNAN & KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@MetroBOS
letters@metro.us

Monday marked the 121st Boston Marathon, but for one out-of-town spectator, it was his first time taking part in the famed event.

Michael Roth made the trip from Chicago to cheer on a friend, and he basked in the clear blue skies and temperatures that hovered in the 70s.

Thousands of fans like Roth clapped, waved signs and shouted words of encouragement to the 30,000 runners who made their way along the 26.2-mile course.

One of those runners was Kathrine Switzer, who in 1967 became the first woman to officially register — and run — in the race. Fifty years late she repeated that feat, wearing the same bib number, 261, she wore the first time. Switzer finished the marathon in 4:44:31, and her bib number will be retired from the Boston Marathon, race officials said.

While the day's warm weather was a joy for spectators, it was another obstacle to overcome for runners, like the grueling ascent around mile 20 known, as Heartbreak Hill.

Before 3 p.m., a few hours into the start of the event, Boston EMS reported that more than 1,200 runners had received medical services at stations along the route, at the finish line and at area hospitals. In Newton, where the race course travels, the local fire department used water misting stations to help keep marathoners cool through the tough hills.

Despite the unexpected heat, runners streamed across the finish line. The elites athletes, of course, led the pack.

Edna Kiplagat of Kenya won her first Boston Marathon with a time of 02:21:52, trailed by Rose Chelimo of Bahrain, who finished about a minute later. Third place in the women's race went to American Jordan Hasay, who finished in 2 hours and 23 minutes. This was the first marathon of Hasay's career, and she set a record for the fastest debut time ever for an American woman.

"Boston is lucky to be the home of the greatest marathon in the world."

Mayor Marty Walsh

In the men's race, Geoffrey Kirui of Kenya took first place, winning with a time of 2:09:37. American Galen Rupp followed in second, clocking in at 2:09:58. Suguro Osaka of Japan came in third, with a time of 02:10:28.

Among the notable runners was a fan favorite from a different sport. Doug Flutie, former New England Patriots quarterback and Boston College star, crossed the finish line to complete his third Boston Marathon.

Mayor Marty Walsh tweeted updates from the course throughout the day. "Boston is lucky to be the home of the greatest marathon in the world," he tweeted at one point.

Burying 'Trumpomania,' Kremlin TV says Trump scarier than North Korean leader

As Russian hopes of swift detente under President Donald Trump have fizzled, state media, which hailed his election win, have made a U-turn. On Sunday, they said he was scarier than North Korea's Kim Jong-Un.

Trump's decisions to launch a missile strike against Syria, a Russian ally, drop a giant bomb on Afghanistan and stick with Obama-era policies on Crimea mean Russian hopes of him befriending the Kremlin have been on the slide for a while.

If state TV is a guide, his tough talk on North Korea's nuclear program and decision to despatch a naval strike force to the region appear to have buried any Russian hopes that he might intervene less in foreign affairs than his predecessors.

Dmitry Kiselyov, anchor of Russia's main weekly TV news show "Vesti Nedeli," on the Rossiya 1 channel, is widely seen as the top pro-Kremlin presenter. He had already began to dial back the Trumpomania and start criticizing the U.S. president.

But on Sunday, his first broadcast since Rex Tillerson's maiden visit to Moscow as secretary of state, Kiselyov, who once praised Trump for his "independence" from the U.S. political establishment, removed the proverbial gloves.

"The world is a hair's breadth from nuclear war," said Kiselyov. "War can break out as a result of confrontation between two personalities; Donald Trump and Kim Jong-Un. Both are dangerous, but who is more dangerous? Trump is."

Donald Trump

Kim Jong-Un GETTY IMAGES

not every time," said Peskov.

The fact that Kiselyov is being given free rein to use such tough rhetoric about Trump is nonetheless likely to reflect how deep the Kremlin's anger runs about what it sees as Trump's failure to deliver on his pledge of better ties with Moscow.

Speaking in front of a picture of the North Korean leader and military commanders juxtaposed next to Trump's image, Kiselyov said Kim Jong-Un was less scary than the president because he was ready for talks, had not attacked other countries and had not sent a naval armada to the U.S. coast.

"He [Kim Jong-Un] is after all on his home territory. He doesn't plan to attack anyone just for the sake of it," said Kiselyov, who was a cheerleader for state TV's strong anti-American tone under the Obama administration and once said Moscow could turn the United States into radioactive ash.

Delivering a personal jibe, Kiselyov sarcastically told viewers that the North Korean leader's young daughter did not, unlike Ivanka Trump, have an office in her father's official residence. REUTERS

Gorsuch energetic in first US high court arguments

Gorsuch, whose confirmation to the lifetime job restored the court's conservative majority, exhibited composure and confidence, sitting on the far right of the bench in the ornate courtroom, alongside liberal Justice Sonia Sotomayor.

President Donald Trump's appointee Neil Gorsuch on Monday showed himself to be a frequent and energetic questioner during Supreme Court arguments in his first day hearing cases as a justice, at one point even apologizing for talking too much.

The first of the three one-hour arguments before the justices on Monday involved an employment dispute. Gorsuch grilled lawyer Christopher Landau, who represented a man claiming he was discriminated against by the Census Bureau, over the fine points of a law governing civil service employees.

The justices, with the exception of the usually silent Clarence Thomas, are known for their aggressive questioning, and Gorsuch showed no qualms about jumping right in.

"I'm sorry for taking up so much time, I apologize," Gorsuch said after his first lengthy exchange, sitting back in his high-backed chair and smiling.

Chief Justice John Roberts welcomed Gorsuch to the court before oral arguments began. "Justice Gorsuch, we wish you a long and happy career in our common calling," Roberts said.

Gorsuch formally joined the Supreme Court on April 10 after being confirmed three days earlier by the Republican-led Senate. GETTY IMAGES

Gorsuch responded by thanking his new colleagues for their "warm welcome."

Gorsuch stepped in three times during the first one-hour argument, on each occasion asking a string of questions about the complicated federal law at issue. As he indicated during his Senate confirmation hearing last month, his line of inquiry focused on the text of the statute, an approach also embraced by the man he replaced on the court, Antonin Scalia, and other conservative jurists.

"Wouldn't it be a lot easier if we followed the plain text of the statute? What am I missing?" Gorsuch asked government lawyer Brian Fletcher at one point.

When Fletcher responded that he could give reasons for his interpretation, Gorsuch appeared unsatisfied. "Not reasons. Where in the language?" he said, referring to the statute.

The court had its full complement of nine justices, five conservatives and four liberals, for arguments for the first time since Scalia's death in February 2016.

The second case involved whether a developer can intervene in a lawsuit brought by a property owner against the town of Chester, New York, over its refusal to give him permission to build on his land. REUTERS

Ben Affleck packs up, moves out, moves on

Hide your kids, hide your wife: Ben Affleck is ready to move on from his divorce, and I am too.

Last week, Jennifer Garner, 45, finally got around to filling for divorce after some well-covered ups and downs. Let's run 'em down: First, they separated in 2015. He maybe cheated with the nanny. Then, earlier this year, Bennifer 2.0 decided to call off the divorce. In March, Affleck admitted he'd completed treatment for alcohol addiction. Now, the divorce is really, seriously happening this time: TMZ reports that after Affleck's stint in rehab, Garner thought it was a good time to be like, "Oh yeah, BTW, this is not going to work, byeeeeee!"

But the actors want to assure you that despite the split, everything is totally chill. So chill, in fact, that the 44-year-old is just now moving out. According to DailyMail, Affleck is out of the family home, and has already started dating someone new (albeit casually). Because Sad Batman literally has no time to waste.

Frankly, I'm impressed with his surprisingly vast emotional capacity: to be able to date the week after your on again/off again wife files for divorce is kind of insane. Teach me your wisdom, Ben!

Sources tell the site the divorce will take at least six months because Affleck and Garner thought love was real and never discussed dividing assets because they were "ambivalent about the divorce." OK, sure!

The gentle giant with the Boston brogue and the woman from the Capital One commercials were married in 2005 and were together for a total of 12 years — which as you know, is an eternity squared in Hollywood years. They share three children: Violet, 11; Seraphina, 8; and Samuel, 5.

It's good to see that Affleck is moving on with his life, or whatever. If he can make it through this, surely he can make it through all the horrible Batman movies he's contractually obligated to complete. Good luck, my dude!

Amber Rose & Odell Beckham Jr. hung out, must be dating

Amber Rose and Odell Beckham Jr. were spotted getting cozy at Coachella this weekend and I'm all about it.

According to Perez Hilton, Rose and Beckham spent some quality time together at the West Coast music fest and even shared a romantic scooter ride together. They also reportedly grabbed swag bags together in one of the merch tents, another classic picturesque activity for two people in the throes of young love. After all, Coachella is the most romantic, most bonkers, most perspiration-heavy music festival.

A spy — maybe Nathan Hale, famously known as the first American Spy, circa 1775 — tells Page Six that as the night went on, "they got flirtier and flirtier." I mean, sounds like the perilous consequences of heat exhaustion and free booze to me, but what do I know?

In 2015, Beckham shot down rumors that he was dating Rose, but maybe he's changed his tune. It's OK, dude. We all make mistakes.

Prince Harry has emotions, feels things

It's been 20 years since Princess Diana's tragic death. And now her youngest son, Prince Harry, is opening up about losing his mother at age 12.

In an interview with The Telegraph's Mad World podcast, the 32-year-old talked about doing the work of caring for your mental health. "I can safely say that losing my mum at the age of 12, and therefore shutting down all of my emotions for the last 20 years, has had a quite serious effect on not only my personal life, but my work as well," he said, according to Cosmopolitan. "I have probably been very close to a complete breakdown on numerous occasions.

"I've now been able to take my work seriously, been able to take my private life seriously, as well." Your private life, huh? I mean, sure, you're working hard to break the stigma surrounding mental-health issues, but could you also be trying to give us a subliminal message about your romantic life, my dude?

Of course, the timing is right. Things have been getting serious between The Young Ginger Prince and his girlfriend, actress Meghan Markle. And I don't know about y'all, but I am definitely ready to see a black woman in Buckingham Palace, even if her husband is more than several steps removed from any actual position of power.

Gwen Stefani would like to be knocked up

It looks like Gwen Stefani is looking to quit "The Voice," and she may be bringing her boyfriend Blake Shelton with her.

According to Inquistr, the couple has experienced friction with their co-star Miley Cyrus, and Stefani, 47, basically refuses to be on the same panel as her. Mature! The couple could be distracted for another reason too: There's a good chance that Stefani intends to get knocked up, and she intends to do it very soon.

According to The Hollywood Gossip, the pop star and Shelton, 40 are talking about marriage despite not being at all engaged — but their priority is pregnancy. "They're trying to have a baby first," says a source. "That's their main focus right now." Oh, man.

Here's hoping that these two and their annoying, possibly just for publicity relationship won't be the downfall of A. "The Voice," and/or B. our society.

Missandei learns how to hack

"Game of Thrones" vet Nathalie Emmanuel returns to the "Fast and/or Furious" series as hacker Ramsey in "The Fate of the Furious," now in theaters. UNIVERSAL PICTURES

"Game of Thrones'" Nathalie Emmanuel talks about being hit on in "The Fate of the Furious."

Nathalie Emmanuel hasn't been home a lot lately. By home, she means London.

"I mean, my stuff is there, you know?" the English actress tells us. "I'm rarely here. But I am technically living in London." But traveling's fine by her. "I can't get enough of it at this point. There is going to come a time when it doesn't happen as much. You might as well enjoy it while it is."

In short, she's been busy. Since 2013, Emmanuel, 28, has played Missandei, interpreter for Daenerys Targaryen on "Game of Thrones." Then she got sucked into the "Maze Runner" franchise. Then she became part of the speed junkie team (sorry: "family") of the "Fast and/or Furious" series. Starting with "Furious 7" and continuing with the new "The Fate of the Furious," she's played Ramsey, a hacker and our heroes' only other female team member (after Michelle Rodriguez), who luckily doesn't have to do any of the driving.

Even though the eighth installment is only Ramsey's second appearance, Emmanuel says her character's already a bit jaded by the experience. For one thing, she spends some of the film being hit on, badly, by Roman (Tyrese Gibson) and Tej (Chris "Ludacris" Bridges), prompting many close-ups of her rolling her eyes.

"It's like, 'Oh, for goodness sake, these silly boys,'" Emmanuel says. "She sort of finds it slightly amusing. She's probably been getting that for a while now. I quite like the fact that she's sort of over it — like, 'OK, guys, we get it.'"

It also shows, she thinks, how much Ramsey stands out from the pack. "She's there as somebody who is very skilled, who has earned her right to be part of this team. She's not necessarily connected to anybody else. She's very independent of them. They've all grown up together, and she doesn't have that history."

In real life, Emmanuel isn't quite the techie she plays onscreen. You don't have to be a hacker to play one. But you do have to look like you know what you're doing, which isn't always easy.

"Sometimes you can tell when someone's faking it. Some actors will say you can tell when an actor doesn't smoke. I was worried people would say, 'You can tell she doesn't type like that all the time,'" Emmanuel says. So she basically practiced, well, typing. "A trick I would do when filming is I would think of sentences in my head and type those on the keyboard — phone numbers or addresses, whatever. I tried to make it look like there were thoughts coming through my fingers."

The "Furious" movies may be among the biggest entertainments on the planet, but "Game of Thrones" is right up there. Over the five seasons, Emmanuel has been able to let Missandei grow considerably from the quiet, reserved character she was at the start.

GETTY

"It used to be that she wasn't considered a human being. She was considered property. Suddenly she's had to navigate a landscape that's completely foreign to her. She's had to make choices. She's had feelings or emotions and wondered whether she should express them," Emmanuel explains. "It's all new territory for her. If you've been brainwashed and indoctrinated your whole life and suddenly your surroundings change, there's always going to be a slight battle with that inside of yourself. Over the series you get to see her evolve and open up, find her way, essentially. It's great to have the time to explore that."

That exploration of complicated characters extends to everyone else, too, she finds. "It really invites us to not see them as just good or bad or heroic or funny. They're all complex characters with layers," she says. "An example would be Jaime Lannister: We hated him from the beginning, but we've grown to love him since he was separated from Cersei. He's done some bad things, but he's also done some noble things. We're invested in them.

"And sometimes they get killed horribly," she adds. "It makes you want to scream — or cheer."

Kelly Rowland gets real about pregnancy

In her debut book "Whoa, Baby!" the singer tells all.

KATE MOONEY
kate.mooney@metro.us

Kelly Rowland is blowing the lid off pregnancy taboos. In her debut book, "Whoa, Baby! A Guide for New Moms Who Feel Overwhelmed and Wonder What the #*$& Just Happened," the former Destiny's Child singer talks about everything you're not supposed to talk about when it comes to the beautiful, er, more like mystifying, terrifying and at times gross process of bringing new life into this world.

"Whoa, Baby!" serves as a tell-all and a resource. The 36-year-old singer co-authored the book with her ob-gyn, Dr. Tristan Bickman, who could provide the medical expertise that informs Rowland's personal accounts of the physical and hormonal changes she experienced during and after her pregnancy.

"I had a million questions and the only person I could call was Dr. Bickman to answer all of them," she says on a call from L.A. "I wish I had had this book after I had my son. If you have the information, you feel more prepared."

Rowland doesn't hold back about the changes to her lady parts. "I felt like she — she is my vagina — was telling me, 'Please just let me be. I just need some time for myself, let me heal!'" she laughs. And she's considering getting a boob job, "just to get them to sit up again."

That openness carries over into matters like postpartum depression. "Once you talk about it, it opens up a dialogue for everyone to talk about it," she says. "No one should feel ashamed or uncomfortable. We have to ask each other, 'How are you feeling?' As moms, as women, we can hold each other up and support each other."

Kelly Rowland tells all in her debut book, "Whoa, Baby! A Guide for New Moms Who Feel Overwhelmed and Wonder What the #*$& Just Happened." GETTY IMAGES

Then there are the oddball physical changes. "My stomach just became literally the color of charcoal," she says. "It stayed like that for about three months. It really freaked me out."

Another thing that happened to Rowland is something called diastasis recti. You've probably never heard of it, but it's an extremely common condition in which the abdominal muscles separate during pregnancy because of pressure from the growing fetus.

Rowland discovered she had the condition a year and a half after giving birth to her son Titan. "I was completely immobilized for more than a day, I simply could not move," she writes in the book.

"It affects your back tremendously if you don't keep an eye on your core," she says. Now she works with trainers doing exercises like pelvic tilts and also track routines — she loves to sprint.

Dr. Iffath Hoskins, clinical associate professor in obstetrics and gynecology at NYU Langone, tells us she sees the condition in about 80 percent of patients.

"As the pregnancy progresses, there is a stretch on the abdominal muscles. The muscles gets looser, like a stretched out rubber band. After the pregnancy, they never really go back completely," Hoskins explains.

This creates an actual gap between the muscles, that can make the belly pooch out. Another sign: if you press two to three fingers on either side of the belly button and feel a space there.

Core strengthening exercises are a great way to prevent and rehabilitate the condition, but stay away from crunches and sit-ups, Hoskins warns, which "increase your abdominal pressure, tighten the muscle and put more force on it."

Rowland says it took her a long time to get used to her postbaby body and "find her groove." But now she's ready to do it all over with baby No. 2.

How to pick the right college for you

National decision day is approaching.

SARA FEINSTEIN
@SaraBFeinstein
sara.feinstein@metro.us

After months of research, campus visits and admission essays, the big decision has arrived: Where are you going to college?

We spoke with Stacey Brook, founder and chief adviser at College Essay Advisors, for some tips on how to make the right choice before the May 1 deadline.

After months of research, tedious applications and campus visits, students finally have to commit to one college. ISTOCK

Consult your records

Before you get overwhelmed by indecision, the first thing you should do is look back at your records, says Brook, "and remember — you prepared for this."

The supplemental essays, which essentially asked students why they were interested in going to any given school, is a great place to start, she explains. These essays require a lot of research and likely "contain many specific justifications that connects the students interests to the resources the school has to offer," says Brook.

There's also a lot of to be learned from what they jotted down during their college visits and online research sessions, explains Brook. "Students should unearth those notes and remind themselves of why each school initially made it onto their lists."

Make a pros-and-cons list

For those who don't know where to begin, start with a trusty pros-and-cons list.

Brook suggests narrowing down your top three choices, and writing down as many defining qualities about each school as you can think of. Pros can include anything from offers my dream major or has excellent cafeteria food, while the cons might take into consideration class sizes or proximity to home, she explains.

The next step: Go through your lists and circle the top three musts in each category, says Brook.

"This just makes it easy to visualize your interest in a set of schools in a more cut-and-dried fashion, and it might make it incredibly obvious where your interest at heart lies."

Do the math

In the end, for many students, choosing a school is going to come down to dollars and cents, says Brook.

If you've received a financial-aid package, it's important that you factor that into the equation, she explains. "Ask the colleges financial aid office to break things down for you and answer any questions that might come up," says Brook. "Those things are typically pretty tricky to unpack. So spending some time with a student debt calculator and really figuring out what your situation will be, even with financial aid, is pretty crucial."

You should also look into how graduates from any given school typically fare upon graduation, she explains, especially in your field of study. Ask yourself, "If I'm going to incur debt, will the reward of getting a degree from the school I've selected financially be worth it?"

The other thing to consider is: Do you have the aspirations to pursue a Masters degree or a PhD? If so, you may want to take into account that you could potentially be accruing yet another degrees worth of expenses when you're finished with your undergraduate years — and plan your spending accordingly.

It's not too late! Act now for mental health counseling licensure under existing laws

New rules to take effect July 1, 2017
Recent mental health counseling licensure changes established by the Massachusetts Board of Allied Mental Health may significantly impact many who are planning careers in this fast-growing field.

"After July 1, 2017, students who have completed a less-than-60 credit qualifying Master's degree in Counseling Psychology, Psychological Studies or School Guidance Counseling, for example, will no longer have the opportunity to pair those degrees with post-graduate coursework to be eligible for licensure," says Niti Seth, Ed.D, Dean of Cambridge College's School of Psychology and Counseling (SOPC).

Still time to enroll in a post-graduate certificate program by July 1 deadline
However, there is still time for students with a less-than-60 credit qualifying Master's degree to take advantage of this opportunity to receive their licensure under existing rules by enrolling in a Cambridge College Certificate of Advanced Graduate Studies (CAGS) program or other Post-master's certificate program by Summer 2017.

"If you are looking to enter a program of study to fulfill course requirements for mental health counseling licensure -- such as Cambridge College's School of Psychology and Counseling CAGS or other Post-master's certificate programs -- your window of opportunity is rapidly closing," says Seth. "Those entering after July 1, 2017 will be required to complete a full 60 credit program, even those who have already completed a less-than-60 credit Master's degree, so the Summer 2017 semester is really the last chance to act under the current licensure laws."

For more information, contact Megan Lawler, SOPC Admissions Counselor at 617-873-0254 or megan.lawler@cambridgecollege.edu. Megan is available to answer questions and to help you enroll into a license qualifying program before the July 1, 2017 deadline.

Changing the face of technology

Women can do absolutely anything — including take over the tech industry.

That was the consensus before the media company Bustle and the coding academy Flatiron School came together to launch an expansion of their Women Take Tech initiative with a scholarship for women who want to embark on careers in technology.

"We believe companies of all kinds benefit with more women in engineering positions," says Kate Ward, Bustle's editor-in-chief. "Bustle is passionate about fostering and supporting more female talent and more female perspectives in the world of technology and media, and about helping to close the gender gap in engineering."

And it's working on doing exactly that. Together, Bustle and Flatiron will offer scholarships for 25 women at Flatiron School's online web-developer program, reducing tuition from $1,500 to $750 a month.

The scholarship hopes to increase opportunity for future female software engineers.

So, you probably have HPV

The most common sexually transmitted infection in the United States often doesn't even have symptoms. ISTOCK

What to know about the most common sexually transmitted infection.

KATE MOONEY
kate.mooney@metro.us

HPV is one of the most mysterious sexually transmitted infections. Although 80 million Americans are infected with human papilloma virus, many don't even know that they have it. That's right, the most common STI in the country often doesn't even have symptoms. And in 90 percent of infected cases, the immune system clears the virus from the body within two years.

A recent study from the National Center for Health Statistics reveals that 42 percent of Americans ages 18 to 59 have HPV. Of that population, roughly 25 percent of men and 20 percent of women are infected with high-risk strains, which are most commonly linked with cervical cancer.

While these new findings shouldn't necessarily alarm you, the prevalence of the virus — and the significant number of high-risk cases — is reason enough to get educated and make sure you're getting screened regularly.

Dr. Grace Lau, assistant professor of obstetrics and gynecology at NYU Langone Medical Center, helped walk us through the most need-to-know aspects of the most under-the-radar STI.

What is HPV?

HPV is a sexually transmitted virus with over 100 types, or strains, 40 of which are sexually transmitted via oral, vaginal and anal sex. (Other strains cause hand and feet warts, and while those might look scary, they're otherwise benign.) Although the virus doesn't manifest any visible symptoms, except in the case of genital warts, it's extremely contagious, with any sexually active person susceptible to it, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Unlike with other STIs, wearing a condom doesn't fully protect you, as exposed skin surrounding the condom can still spread it, Lau notes.

High-risk vs. low-risk HPV

The myriad strains of the virus are categorized high-risk and low-risk, indicating how likely they are to develop into cervical cancer. The strains HPV-16 and HPV-18 are responsible for 70 percent of cases of cervical cancer, whereas strains HPV-6 and HPV-11, while linked to 90 percent of cases of genital warts, have a much lower likelihood of causing cancer.

How do you get tested for it?

It depends on your age and sex. Guidelines from the American Society for Colposcopy and Cervical Pathology advise that women in their 20s get pap smears every three years, and from age 30 to 65, every five years. While 20-something women are not specifically tested for HPV, the pap smears can detect abnormal cervical cells, after which your doctor can assess next steps. Women age 30 and older receive an HPV test in conjunction with the pap smear, which tests for 14 of the most common high-risk strains.

A doctor administers the HPV vaccine. GETTY IMAGES

Not-so-fun fact: Although men are just as likely to contract HPV as women — and just as likely to pass it to a sexual partner — there is no HPV test for men. This is because statistics of men developing anal, penile or oropharyngeal (throat) cancers from HPV are extremely low. According to Lau, with increased research on HPV, testing for men might — and should — become an option. "[For men] knowing your status and whether this is something you could transmit to your sexual partner could be helpful," she says.

How do you prevent it?

The best way to prevent HPV is to get vaccinated against it at a young age. The three FDA-approved vaccines approved for females ages 9 to 26 — Gardasil, Gardasil-9 and Cervarix — prevent infections caused by HPV-16 and HPV-18, the high-risk strains that have been linked to 70 percent of cervical cancer cases. While the vaccines may provide some preventative benefit in adults older than 26 — although insurance is less likely to cover it — they are most effective when administered to kids around age 11 or 12, before they're sexually active and are less likely to have been exposed to the virus.

How do you treat it?

While most incidences of HPV clear up on their own, for persistent cases there are a few options. Genital warts are often treated with prescription gels or removal via cryotherapy (freezing) electrocauterization (burning) lasers or surgery.

In the case of an abnormal pap smear or detection of high-risk HPV, a patient is advised to return for a colposcopy, a procedure that examines the cervix and then biopsies tissue to evaluate any potential precancerous changes in the cells. This can follow with a LEEP procedure — loop electrosurgical excision procedure — which removes the abnormal cells and is 90 percent effective, according to Planned Parenthood.

What you can do

Aside from getting screened regularly and keeping up on new research, you likely don't need to spend much time fretting over HPV. "You have to live your life," says Lau. "Because the reality is HPV is prevalent, but being educated about what that means and following through with your doctor to make sure if you have an infection it clears is the most important thing."

STEVENS FAR FROM 'A GENIUS' SO FAR IN NBA PLAYOFFS

OPINION

Brad Stevens is just 2-9 in the NBA Playoffs. GETTY IMAGES

Where, oh, where, is "Big Game" Brad?

Brad Stevens made a name for himself because he got his Butler Bulldogs to a pair of NCAA National Championship games. Those teams took things to a higher gear when there was more at stake, and they thrived under do-or-die pressure.

So far in Boston (hard to believe it, he's been here since 2013), Stevens has done just the opposite of what he did in college. The sample size is still small, but Stevens so far is nothing more than a regular season wonder in the NBA.

He's Mr. January, in a league where the playoffs don't heat up until Memorial Day.

Stevens' Celtics were swept badly by the Cavaliers two years ago as the average margin of victory for Cleveland in all four games was 9.25 points.

Last year in the playoffs, the Celtics looked woefully unprepared in a Game 2 loss to Atlanta, scoring seven points in the first quarter and 72 overall. They rebounded in the series against the Hawks, tying it, 2-2. But in Game 5 at Atlanta, the Celtics were again blown out — this time by 27 points.

In a do-or-die Game 6 against the Hawks at the Garden, Stevens' Celtics died. The Hawks built a 28-point lead at one point and ran away with a 104-92 series-clinching victory.

Stevens didn't do anything egregiously wrong in those losses, or in the Game 1 loss to the Bulls on Easter night this year. It's just that many Green teamers are convinced that Stevens is — as Wile E. Coyote used to say — a "Super Genius." And when someone is consistently labeled a "Super Genius," you expect that genius to show up on the big stage.

So far, that simply hasn't happened for Stevens in Boston.

Now, it's not really on Stevens that the Celtics were destroyed on the boards Sunday against Chicago (65-44 rebounds in favor of the Bulls). That's more of a Danny Ainge problem.

Stevens can scream at his guys until he's blue in the face that they need to box out, but height often helps in these matters — and the Celtics don't have much of it.

Still, "Super Genius" Stevens should be able to find different ways to win a game — especially against an inferior opponent (in their last regular season meeting March 12, the Celtics clobbered the Bulls 100-80).

The playoffs should be Stevens' time to shine, his time to coach circles around these other dummies — particularly a seat-filler like Fred Hoiberg. Instead, though, there was a different former college star coach who stole the "best young mind" award this past weekend.

Utah's Quin Snyder refused to call a time out in the closing seconds of Game 1 vs. the Clippers and came out beautifully. Synder ID'd a mismatch with LA's Jamal Crawford (one of the worst defenders in the NBA) still on the floor. Calling a timeout would have allowed old friend Doc Rivers to get Crawford out of the game, but Synder rolled with what was on the floor and Joe Johnson was able to exploit Crawford for a game-winning, buzzer-beater.

It's extremely early in his pro basketball coaching career, but the record right now shows that Stevens is an ugly 2-9 in the postseason.

The Celtics could really use their resident genius to show up Tuesday night at the Garden in a must-win Game 2 (8 p.m., CSNNE, TNT).

Thomas likely to play tonight

Isaiah Thomas is expected to play Tuesday night against the Bulls in Game 2 of the series. After the game, Thomas is expected to travel to Tacoma, Washington, to be with his family after the tragic loss of his sister this past weekend in a car accident. Game 3 of the series is not until Friday in Chicago.

Sox starting to roll, now headed to Toronto

The bullpen has been a catalyst for Boston this season.

MATT BURKE
@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

The Red Sox (8-5) are fresh off their first three-game win streak of the season as they visit Toronto for the first of three games tonight (7 p.m., NESN).

After dropping a 10-5 decision to Tampa Bay last Friday night at the Fens, the Sox rebounded to beat the Rays on Saturday, Sunday and Monday. On Patriots' Day Monday, Andrew Benintendi provided the most significant offense for the Sox in their 4-3 victory over the Rays. His two-run single allowed three runners to cross the plate in the second inning, thanks partially to a dropped throw by Rays' second baseman Brad Miller. Benintendi had three hits on the day, upping his batting average to .314. Dustin Pedroia, Mookie Betts (2), Hanley Ramirez, Chris Young and Sandy Leon also collected hits for the Sox in the annual early affair.

Steven Wright (1-1, 8.36 ERA) picked up the win for the Red Sox, working six innings and allowing just one earned run on nine hits.

The Boston bullpen was again strong, giving up just two hits. Craig Kimbrel picked up his sixth save of the season, which places him second in all of baseball in the young season.

"Once they get a little success, their confidence is starting to grow," Red Sox manager John Farrell told WEEI regarding his bullpen. "And I think they settle into that pecking order that has emerged. It still comes down to executing, which they've done a very good job at."

The road ahead

Eduardo Rodriguez is on paternity leave and was slated to start for the Sox on Tuesday in Toronto. Brian Johnson is scheduled to get the ball for Boston instead. Johnson was drafted in the first round of the 2012 draft but has battled anxiety and hasn't seen much major league action.

He has a 1.69 ERA in two starts for Pawtucket this season.

Rick Porcello (1-1, 7.56 ERA) and Chris Sale (1-1, 1.25 ERA) will follow Johnson in the rotation up north before the Sox head down to Baltimore for a weekend set.

The Blue Jays are dead last in the AL East with a 2-10 record while Baltimore has jumped out to a quick start at 8-3.

DIAGNOSE CTE Research Project Needs Volunteers

Chronic Traumatic Encephalopathy (CTE) is a brain disease associated with repetitive hits to the head, such as those experienced in football and other contact sports. It results in changes in thinking and memory, mood, and behavior, as well as dementia. Currently, CTE can only be diagnosed after death.

The DIAGNOSE CTE Research Project is a major study (funded by the National Institutes of Health) to develop methods of diagnosing CTE during life and to examine risk factors for the disease.

In addition to former NFL players and healthy controls, the research study is recruiting former varsity college football players.

You may eligible for this study if you:

- Are male between 45 and 74 years old
- Played 3 or more seasons of varsity football at the college level

Participation requires a 3-day extensive visit to Boston University School of Medicine.

All travel expenses are covered.
You may receive up to $500 compensation.

Aries Don't let what others do tempt you. You are best off doing your own thing. A problem you have with whoever is in charge is best kept to yourself.

Taurus Learn all you can and apply it to what you are trying to accomplish. Put one foot in front of the other and keep moving until you reach your destination.

Gemini Don't let people get you down or take away from what you are trying to accomplish. If someone makes it difficult for you to function, reconsider the relationship.

Cancer Use common sense and exercise caution when dealing with someone showing signs of inconsistency. Keep a close watch on extravagance in others and yourself.

Leo Emotional situations will surface at work if you or a colleague is impulsive or unrealistic. Think before you act or respond.

Virgo Spending time with someone who could provide knowledge and insight into something you want to pursue will pay off. Look over personal contracts.

Libra Put your time and energy into positive pursuits. You'll make progress if you stay focused and dedicated. Finishing what you start will help you avoid criticism.

Scorpio Personal alterations can lead to gains if you are passionate about the changes you enact. Don't rely on someone else to take care of your responsibilities.

Sagittarius Think twice before you do or say something you'll regret. Concentrate on making personal changes instead of trying to change others.

Capricorn Question anyone trying to force through a plan without offering sufficient grounds for doing so. It's your right to know facts and figures before you get involved.

Aquarius You'll end up spending more if you haven't taken care of your personal investments or taxes. Dealing with institutions and government agencies will require finesse.

Pisces Explain what you want and what you expect. Being evasive will not help you get ahead. Show your ability to adapt, understand and take charge. EUGENIA LAST
